Q1: Read the following passage and make notes in an appropriate format: (15 Marks)

In today's rapidly changing world, learning no longer ends with formal education. New technologies, changing workplaces, and global competition require individuals to continuously acquire new knowledge and skills throughout their lives. Lifelong learning enables people to remain productive, adaptable, and confident while facing new challenges.

Modern learning opportunities are available through universities, online platforms, digital libraries, webinars, podcasts, and professional certification programmes. Unlike traditional classroom education, these learning methods allow people to study at their own pace while continuing their jobs or other responsibilities.

Employers increasingly value individuals who demonstrate curiosity, problem-solving ability, teamwork, communication skills, and willingness to upgrade their knowledge. Continuous learning not only improves career opportunities but also contributes to personal development by enhancing creativity, decision-making, and self-confidence.

Technology has made learning more accessible than ever before. Mobile devices, artificial intelligence, virtual laboratories, and cloud-based learning platforms enable students and professionals to learn anytime and anywhere. However, learners must also develop critical thinking skills to distinguish reliable information from misinformation available on the Internet.

Governments, educational institutions, and industries now recognize lifelong learning as an essential requirement for sustainable development. A culture of continuous learning helps societies become more innovative, economically competitive, and socially responsible.
